The Snob

CANDY was leaving school with her friends Tina and Trish as the new girl, Jill Bentley, walked past them. "We're going to my house to listen to some new platters, Jill," said Candy. "Want to come along?"

"Thanks," smiled Jill, barely pausing to answer, "but I really can't. Maybe some other time."

"There won't be an other time," mocked Candy as Jill hurried away down the walk, "because I'll never ask her again. Miss Snip-nose won't get another chance to turn me down."

In the O'Connor's living room, the new platters were forgotten as the three girls engaged in a gabfest about Jill Bentley that succeeded in putting her in her proper place as far as they were concerned. She was, in their opinion, just plain high hat with a smile that was a little too drippy sweet and a nose that was always tilted a little too high.

"The only one she ever sees outside of the classroom is Bernie Gillis," said Trish, "and she condescends to go out with him only on special occasions."

"I suppose he'll take her to the dance Saturday night," sighed fat Tina. "I sure wish that big hunk of man would ask me."

"Personally, I'd as soon she didn't come to the dance at all," piped up Candy just as her mother came into the room. "We'd all have a better time without the snob around."

"Who's a snob?" inquired Mrs. O'Connor of Candy after she had greeted Trish and Tina. "Who is this person you don't want around?"

"Jill Bentley, the girl who came into our class this semester," replied Candy. "She doesn't want anything to do with us so, from now on, we're leaving her strictly alone. We can be as stuck up as she can."

"Candy," admonished Mrs. O'Connor after Trish and Tina had gone, "I'm disappointed in you. Regardless of how you feel about this girl Jill, you must be friendly and nice to her. She may have a reason for behaving as she does but, even if she's a snob as you say, that's no reason for you to be one."

Ted came to the door then. "Hi, chick," he said with a grin as he danced his way through the door. "Come over to have a whirl to the new platters and see if you're all set for the dance Saturday night."

The dance was a formal affair and one of the big events of the year. Candy was certainly all set for it and wouldn't miss it for anything in the world. Or so she thought, at the time. But something happened the next day to change her mind.

It was Friday and Tina and Trish were waiting for Candy as she came down the steps from the school building. "It's time to hop to the Sweet Shoppe," called Tina. It had become a custom for the gang to meet there every Friday afternoon.

"Sorry, kids, but I can't today," answered Candy as she rushed by. "I have to catch up with Ted to tell him something."

She rushed ahead and found Ted with Bernie Gillis and some of the other boys. "I want to talk to you," she said in a low voice. "Come with me to my house."

From the next room, Mrs. O'Connor couldn't help overhearing the conversation between Candy and Ted as they came into the house.

"What's wrong?" asked Ted. "You look as if you'd lost your last friend."

"I found one," answered Candy. "Only you're not going to like what I've done. Ted, I can't go with you to the dance tomorrow night."

"You WHAT?" exploded Ted. "Now, listen, kitten. You—"

"I'll explain," interrupted Candy, "but you mustn't tell a soul. I spoke to Jill Bentley today and asked if she'd be at the dance. She said she wouldn't so I figured she was being high hat, as usual. But then she told me that she's working her way through school. She does house work and cooking and studies at night while she's baby sitting for the family. She's been too proud to tell anybody about it before. But big tears came to her eyes when she said Bernie had asked her, so—"

"So?" questioned Ted, glumly.

"I told her we didn't want to go to the dance anyway and that I'd baby sit for her and she could wear my formal and—"

Mrs. O'Connor interrupted as she came into the room, smiling. "Don't worry, Ted," she said. "You and Candy can still go to the dance. I'll do the baby sitting myself. And Candy has more than one formal. Why don't you make it a foursome?"

When Candy and Ted and Jill and Bernie came to the dance together, Tina and Trish could hardly believe their eyes. "How come?" they asked when they had Candy alone for a minute.

"I'll tell you later," whispered Candy happily. "But be nice to Jill. She's no snob. I was the snob until my mother set me straight."

Of all the dances Candy had ever attended, somehow this one was the best.
